They would fit perfectly into a right-wing lineup -- on the right. The only person I've heard of who hasn't actively and vocally supported Obamatax is Charles Krauthammer. Yes, I would agree that it is a power grab. But there is a difference between that and some other power grabs. It is very firmly in power holders back pocket now, and it is not going to be that way in the near future. It will be scaled back over time. The question is how? If not via a plebiscite, then it will be via the courts. I don't know if all tax dollars will have to be spent by the same organization that would be liable for spending via the courts, but the money will have to be spent by someone, right? A plebiscite is a great idea. The more people hear of it, the more they'll know about it and the more likely they'll support it. Yes, it is a power grab but it is not a straight power grab. Having a plebiscite where the question of what we want to
